Masks are no longer required at Kansas City Symphony concerts inside Helzberg Hall at the Kauffman Center for the Performing Arts

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – February 22, 2022 The Kansas City Symphony announced today that face masks are no longer required inside Helzberg Hall during KC Symphony performances. However, mask wearing is still strongly encouraged.

Effective immediately, for all upcoming Kansas City Symphony concerts:

- Masks are still required when entering the Kauffman Center for the Performing Arts complex, and while in the lobby and box office areas when not actively eating or drinking.
- If you desire, you may remove your mask once inside Helzberg Hall when attending a
- Kansas City Symphony performance.
- This policy applies only to Kansas City Symphony performances. For performances at the Kauffman Center by organizations other than the KC Symphony, please refer to that organization's website or kauffmancenter.org for specific masking requirements.

The current vaccination policy is still in effect:

- Only fully vaccinated individuals will be admitted. (Moderna, Pfizer, Johnson & Johnson or other WHO-approved vaccine).
- You must have received your final shot at least 14 days before attending a concert.
- Negative COVID tests will NOT be accepted for anyone of any age.
- You must show your actual vaccination card, or a photo of the card on your phone, along with corresponding photo I.D. upon entry. No exceptions.
